Why we make mistakes We misremember our high school grades. We give our friends gift cards theyâ€™ll never use. We think weâ€™d be happier if we lived in California (we wouldnâ€™t) and we think we should stick with our first answer on tests (we shouldnâ€™t). Why do we make mistakes? And could we do a little better? We human beings have design flaws.

Why we make mistakes - University of Minnesota

So we can all make mistakes. Some quite innocent like nearly brushing your teeth with hand cream, and of course others with far greater consequences. One of our constant frustrations in safety and risk can be not understanding why people make mistakes. Hopefully you will now have a better appreciation of just some of the reasons why we make mistakes.

We are trained to distinguish right from wrong at an early age. Principles like hard work and honesty are regarded as right while failure and (especially) mistakes are conditioned to be wrong. But we all make mistakes: infidelity, financial mis-investments, a lapse of good judgement -- any lamentable action can be considered a mistake.
